SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1946

GEORGE W. ARMSTRONG, SR., ET AL,
Petitioners,

vs.

SEABOARD SURETY COMPANY,
Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI AND BRIEF IN SUPPORT THEREOF

TO THE HONORABLE CHIEF JUSTICE AND ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

George W. Armstrong, Sr., Mary C. Armstrong, Allen J. Armstrong and George W. Armstrong, Jr., petitioners, pray that a writ of certorari issue to review the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals for the 5th Circuit entered on December 6, 1946, rehearing overruled January 13, 1947, affirming the decree of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas entered on January 12, 1946, in a suit styled Seaboard Surety Company, plaintiff v. George W. Armstrong, Sr., et al, Defendants, No. 748 CIVIL.

OPINION BELOW

BASIS OF JURISDICTION

Jurisdiction is invoked under Sec. 240(a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the Acts of February 13, 1925, 43 Stat. 398 (28 U. S. C. A. Sec. 347) and under Supreme Court Rule No. 38, Sec. 5, Sub. Div. b. The grounds for jurisdiction which will be hereinafter more fully stated under that head is based upon the claim that the Circuit Court of Appeals, as well as the District Court, failed to apply the applicable federal rules and the applicable state law and that the decision herein as applied to the facts is in conflict with numerous federal cases and state decisions hereinafter more specifically set forth under the heading referred to.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The controlling questions presented in this petition are:

1. Whether, after the entry of a declaratory judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the District Court, that court erred in entering a further judgment in the same case granting coercive relief to the plaintiff by rendering judgment on certain note, the validity of which was involved in said suit for declaratory judgment after appeal was perfected and while the same was pending, and based solely on said declaratory judgment contrary to the ordinary rule that where an appeal is pending from a judgment of a trial court, that court is without jurisdiction to proceed further in said cause until said appeal has been determined.

2. Whether the trial court erred in rendering judgment against petitioners, guarantors of the debts of the Texasteel Manufacturing Company, a corporation, which debt was represented by notes sued upon without having previously or at the same time rendering judgment against said corporation the principal debtor without either pleading or proof that said corporation was insolvent or beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

3. Whether the Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the petitioners were primary obligors on said notes and, therefore suable as principal without the joinder of said corporation the principal debtor.

4. Whether the trial court erred in rendering judgment against petitioners on said notes pending the proceeding for reorganization of said Texasteel Manufacturing Company filed by Respondent and without pleading or proof that a claim had been filed by respondent for said indebtedness in said reorganization proceedings.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS BELOW

The appeal in this case is from a judgment in the companion case in which application for certiorari has been filed and which were argued together and one opinion rendered for both by the Circuit Court of Appeals. The companion case being No. 11,499, Texasteel Manufacturing Company, et al, Appellants, v. Seaboard Surety Company, Appellee. The appeal in the instant case in the Circuit Court of Appeals was No. 11,603 styled George W. Armstrong, Sr., et al, Appellants v. Seaboard Surety Company, Appellee.

After the judgment of May 2, 1945, in Cause No. 11,499 in the Circuit Court of Appeals and while the appeal, from the judgment in said cause which was styled in the lower court Seaboard Surety Company v. Goerge W. Armstrong, et al, No. 748 CIVIL, was pending in the Circuit Court of Appeals respondent filed a petition in the same cause praying for a judgment against petitioners for the principal, interest and attorney fees on certain notes as follows:

A note payable to Continental National Bank, dated December 8, 1943, for the sum of $350,000.00, with interest from date at the rate of five per cent per annum, and providing for attorney fees of ten per cent of the principal and interest due, and signed by Texasteel Manufacturing Company by Allen J. Armstrong, President, with a written guarantee on the back thereof signed by George W. Armstrong, George W. Armstrong, Jr., and Allen J. Armstrong.

A second note for the sum of $100,000.00, dated March 1, 1944, payable to said bank and signed by George W. Armstrong, Jr., with a written guarantee on the back thereof signed by George W. Armstrong.

A third note for the sum of 100,000.00, dated March 1, 1944, payable to said bank and signed by Allen J. Armstrong with a written guarantee on the back thereof signed by George W. Armstrong.

All of said notes were indorsed without recourse by the Continental National Bank to Respondent. (R. 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66).

Respondent's sole claim for judgment for the amount of said notes, principal, interest and attorney's fee was based on said declaratory judgment. (R. 2, 4, 5 and 14).

Petitioners moved to dismiss said petition on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction, in that an appeal was pending from said declaratory judgment and that the trial court was without jurisdiction to enforce it while said appeal was pending; further pleaded that petitioners were sureties on said note and not liable otherwise, and that it would be inequitable and unjust to enter judgment against them with award of an execution during the pendency of reorganization proceedings filed by respondent in which a trustee for the property of the said corporation had been appointed and was then engaged in managing the affairs and administering the properties of said company; that said company was a going concern and its assets exceeded the total amount of its indebtedness. (R. 24, 25). Subject to said motion petitioner pleaded that pendency of the appeal from the declaratory judgment and that as to the obligations sued upon, petitioners were accommodation sureties. (R. 26, 27). The trial court overruled the motion to dismiss and held that the declaratory judgment was res adjudicata and that respondents were entitled to the relief prayed for based upon the declaratory judgment of May 2, 1945, and rendered judgment against the petitioners last hereinabove named for the principal, interest and attorney fees of said note. The decree against George W. Armstrong, Allen J. Armstrong and George W. Armstrong, Jr., was for the sum of $397,031.25, with interest on said note of $350,000.00, and against George W. Armstrong and Allen J. Armstrong for the sum of $113,437.50 with interest, and against George W. Armstrong and George W. Armstrong, Jr., for an additional sum of $113,437.50, with interest. (R. 110, 111). It was stipulated that an appeal was pending from said declaratory judgment of May 2, 1945, at the time of the said decree (R. 37). The judgment on January 12, 1946, was rendered solely on said declaratory judgment. The court filed conclusions of fact and law in which it found that the judgment rendered on May 2, 1945, and on appeal in said Cause No. 11,499, was res adjudicata and that the judgment so entered on January 12, 1946, was based solely on said judgment. (R. 122, 123). The sole ground for said monetary judgment claimed by respondent was that it was entitled to enforce the declaratory decree entered on May 2, 1945. (R. 2).

The prayer of the petitioner for coercive relief and for a show cause order was based wholly on said declaratory judgment. (R. 14). Respondents offered in evidence the application signed by petitioner for a surety bond dated December 8, 1943, and this instrument was an application by Texasteel Manufacturing Company, of Fort Worth, Texas, for a bond in the sum of $350,000.00 to date from December 3, 1943. The nature and character of bond is described as loan guarantee and paragraph two, thereof, recites that the "undersigned will at all times indemnify and keep indemnified the surety and save it harmless by reason of having executed the said bond referred to," and this application is signed by Texasteel Manufacturing Company, Allen J. Armstrong, indemnitor, and then George W. Armstrong and George W. Armstrong, Jr. (R. 68, 69, 70 and 71). Similar applications for two other bonds, each in the sum of $100,000.00.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THIS WRIT

The holding of the Circuit Court of Appeals that the granting of the money judgment in the case after the rendition of declaratory judgment was not error is in conflict with numerous decisions of other circuits and of this court, declaring the rule to be that an appeal from the final judgment vested in the appellate court jurisdiction in the case and divested the trial court of all other jurisdiction with reference to the judgment rendered, so long as appeal is pending. The rule as stated is taken from the opinion In Re Allen, 115 F. 2d 936. It was held in U. S. v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co. 20 F. 2d 529 that the above rule has been uniformly followed and applied to judgments of Federal Court. in Civil Cases.

In U. S. v. Radice, 40 F. 2d 445, the rule stated:

> "But we are not at liberty to consider the merits of the District Court's ruling because the record discloses that the court was without jurisdiction to allow intervention at the time the order was entered on November 18, 1929. The decree of forfeiture was made June 24, 1929, and on the same day an appeal was allowed to the lessee. Citation on appeal issued September 5th, the record was filed in this court October 20th, and the appeal was argued November 6th. The perfecting of that appeal transferred all jurisdiction of this court, and thereafter, during pendency of that appeal, the court below was without power to vacate or modify its decree of forfeiture."

In 4 C.J.S. 605, 606, 607, pages 1089-1091, the rule is stated as shown above and numerous cases of this court and other Circuit Courts of Appeal are cited which are listed in the margin:

U. S. v. Radice, 40 F. 2d 445;
Berman v. Wreck-A-Pair Bldg. Co., 182 Sou. 54 (Ala.).

The fact that the judgment appealed from was not superseded does not affect the application of the rule. The matter of supersedeas becomes material only when the point considered is the enforcement of the judgment according to its term. A judgment may be enforced according to its terms when not superseded. If the court had awarded any kind of writ for the enforcement of the declaratory judgment, an appeal by cost bond only would have prompted the issuance and service of such writs and the enforcement of the judgment as provided for in the decree. This is beside the point. In this case, the decree was a declaratory judgment only, no coercive relief was asked or granted and the instant proceeding was for the sole purpose of obtaining a judgment based on the declaratory judgment of May 2, 1945, while the appeal was pending. The monetary judgment rendered was entered in the same cause and by a pleading which was in effect a motion for coercive relief, and upon the pleading being presented to the court had issued a show cause order. The point is not whether the judgment appealed from is superseded but the question is the power of the court to exercise jurisdiction in the same case after a final judgment rendered by him while an appeal from such judgment is pending and undecided.

Unless a rule exists concerning declaratory judgment, which differs from the ordinary rule with respect to judgments of Federal Courts in civil cases generally, the trial court was without jurisdiction to entertain the petition and render the judgment of January 12, 1946.

No case has been cited by respondent and none was referred to in the per curim opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals deciding this question in favor of the action of the Court below. In Sinclair Ref. Co. v. Burris, 133 F. 2d 536, it was said that a declaratory judgment only fixes the rights of the parties, which rights may be enforced in a separate suit. In Borchards "Declaratory Judgments," page 255, it is further stated that the ordinary rules apply to an appeal from a declaratory judgment.

In numerous cases it has been stated that Section 400, Title 28, U.S.C.A. does not add to the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts nor does it change the essential requisites of the jurisdiction of Federal Courts.

Agnew v. Hoague, 99 F. 2d 349; Miles Laboratories v. Federal Trade Commission, 140 F. 2d 683. It is submitted that the question has never been decided in favor of the action of the trial court, and that it is of such importance that the holding of the Circuit Court of Appeals, contrary to the general rule, should be reviewed.

The holding of the Circuit Court of Appeals that petitioners were primarily liable on the obligation, for which recovery was allowed, is contrary to the decisions of the Supreme Court of Texas in the case of Wood v. Canfield Paper Co., 117 Tex. 399; and the applicable Texas Statutes being Arts. 1986, 1987 and 6251 Revised Statutes, which Statutes are shown in Appendix B to supporting brief.

The opinion recognizes the rule declared by said statutes, which provides, in substance, that no judgment should be rendered against a party not primarily liable on a note or other contract, unless judgment be also rendered against the principal obligor, except where the principal obligor can not be reached, by the ordinary process of law, or his residence unknown, and can not be ascertained by the use of reasonable diligence, or is actually or notoriously insolvent. The error in the holding of the Circuit Court of Appeals is in the fact that petitiners were primarily liable. The grounds for this holding are not stated. The contract evidencing the liability of George W. Armstrong was written on the back of each of the three notes above referred to, and by this recital, all the liability therein imposed was strictly that of a guarantor. Guaranty Etc. v. Singleton, (Tex. Civ. App.), 85 S. W. 2d 803; Wood v. Canfield Paper Co., 117 Tex. 399. The contention of respondent in the Circuit Court was that because the notes contained a recitation that all signers and indorsers thereof are to be regarded as principals (R. 61), and because petitioners signed the application for surety bonds above referred to, that this constituted them indemnitors and, therefore, primarily liable. The contract signed by George W. Armstrong was a separate contract and not part of the note itself. Eller v. Irvin, 265 S. W. 595. The undertaking was to guarantee the payment of the within instrument at maturity, and waive protest and notice of sale. This was a contract of guaranty. Guaranty Etc. v. Singleton, 85 S. W. 2d 803 did not render said Armstrong liable as an indorser. Wood v. Canfield Paper Co., 117 Tex. 399; Central Trust Co. v. Manley (5 cir.) 100 F. 2d 993. The suit of respondent, and on which judgment was rendered in its favor, was not on an indemnity contract, and the said application referred to above related not to the notes, but to a bond which respondents executed as sureties for Texasteel Manufacturing Company. The judgment against petitioners was for the principal, interest and attorney fees stipulated in the notes, and by respondents as the owner of such notes. The judgment could not have been rendered under the proof on an indemnity contract. In such a case recovery would only have been allowed for the amount of attorneys fees actually paid or contracted to be paid. First State Bank v. Wallace, 165 S. W. 595; U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Paulk, 155 S. W. 2d 100. There was neither pleading nor proof that the corporation was insolvent. Insolvency under said articles of Texas Statutes above referred to, means that the principal debtor has no assets of a substantial amount which may be used even as a part payment on such debt. Smith v. Oberjohns, 93 Tex. 35; 53 S. W. 341. In fact the proof in the record, was only that said corporation had assets exceeding its debt, and that said corporation had a net worth of $570,000.00. (R. 105, 106).

No presumption of insolvency can be indulged from the filing and approval of the reorganization petition, because if a corporation is absolutely insolvent, the petition for reorganization would not be approved. In Re Ware Metal Polish Co., 42 F. Supp. 538.

It has been frequently declared by Texas decisions, that where payee in a note knows that one of the signers of a note is the surety for another, the creditor must have due regard for his rights as a surety, even though the suretyship does not appear on the face of the instrument. Lubbock First Natl. Bank v. Alexander, 4 S. W. 2298; Victoria etc. Bank v. Skidmore, 30 S. W. 564.

WHEREFORE petitioners tender herewith a record of the proceedings in the trial Court and in the Circuit Court of Appeals as required by the Supreme Court Rule 38, and respectfully pray that a writ of certiorari issue out of and under the seal of this Honorable Court, directed to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, commanding that court to certify and send to this Court for its review and determination a full and complete transcript of the record, and of the proceedings of said United States Circuit Court of Appeals, 5th Circuit, and in the case numbered on its docket as No. 11,603, styled George W. Armstrong Sr., et al, Appellants v. Seaboard Surety Company appellee, to the end that the judgment in said case may be reviewed and determined by this court, and as provided for by the Statutes of the United States and the rules of this court, and that the said judgment of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, 5th Circuit, in the cause referred to be reversed with appropriate direction of this court, and for such further relief as to this court may seem proper.

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1946

GEORGE W. ARMSTRONG, SR., ET AL,
Petitioners,

vs.

SEABOARD SURETY COMPANY,
Respondent.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

OPINION OF THE COURT BELOW

The opinion of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, in said cause styled George W. Armstrong, Sr., et al, appellants v. Seaboard Surety Company, appellee, No. 11,603, is not yet reported in the Federal Reports but may be found in the records filed in this suit R. 140.

II.

JURISDICTION

This has been stated under "Basis of Jurisdiction" and "Reasons for Granting the Writ" in the preceeding petition for writ of certiorari to which reference is here made and, therefore, will not be repeated here.

III.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The case has already been stated in the preceeding petition for writ of certiorari on page 4 which statement is hereby adopted and made a part of this brief.

IV.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS

1. The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the rendition of monetary judgment awarding execution against petitioner for the amount of the principal, interest and attorney fees of said notes sued on and said judgment being wholly based on the declaratory judgment and entered while an appeal from said declaratory judgment was pending was not in error.

2. The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in affirming the judgment of the trial court entered after the rendition of the declaratory judgment and in the same case while an appeal from said declaratory judgment was then pending.

3. The Trial Court was without jurisdiction to proceed further in the case in which said declaratory judgment was rendered while an appeal from said declaratory judgment was pending.

4. The Court of Civil Appeals erred in holding that petitioners were primarily liable on the notes for which judgment was rendered against them, and that it was not error for the trial court to render judgment against petitioners for the full amount of said notes without having previously, or at the same time, rendered judgment against Texasteel Manufacturing Company, the principal debtor, without either allegation or proof that said corporation was insolvent, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

5. The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in affirming the judgment of the trial court against the petitioners on the obligation sued on, pending the proceedings for reorganization of Texasteel Manufacturing Company, in which said corporation was involved; said proceedings being filed by respondent, without exhausting the assets of the principal debtor before rendering judgment against petitioners.

V.

ARGUMENT AND AUTHORITIES

Three points are presented by the foregoing assignment:

1. The first is that the trial court was without jurisdiction to render judgment against petitioners on the notes sued on and based solely on said declaratory judgment while an appeal from said declaratory judgment was pending:

2. And the Second point is the error of the trial court in rendering judgment against petitioners who were guarantors of said notes without having previously, or at the same time, rendered judgment against the principal debtor, said corporation, without either pleading or proof that said corporation was either insolvent or beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

3. That the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is exclusive.

The first and third points are governed by the Federal decisions, and the second point is a question of State Law. There is no dispute in the facts. The declaratory judgment was rendered as shown above on May 2, 1945, and an appeal taken therefrom, and while said appeal was pending a petition, or motion, was filed in the same cause by respondents, and based solely on said declaratory judgment, for a judgment and execution on the notes sued on, the validity of which was involved in said proceedings for a declaratory judgment. The judgment against the petitioners on such notes was based upon the assignment of said notes, without recourse to respondent, by the Continental National Bank and the liability of George W. Armstrong, Sr., for the amount of said notes is based upon a written guaranty on the back of each of said notes; and the liability of Allen J. Armstrong, for the note signed by George W. Armstrong, Sr., is based upon a similar guaranty; and the liability of George W. Armstrong, Jr., for the note signed by Allen J. Armstrong is based upon a like guaranty. (R. 61-64). The record shows that said corporation was involved in reorganization proceedings still pending. (R. 123).

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals decided all points adversely to petitioners. The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is contrary to, and definitely in conflict with, the prevailing rule in the Federal Court, on the first and third points and contrary to, and definitely in conflict with, the Acts of the Texas Legislature as shown by Appendix "B" to this brief, and the decisions of the state courts construing and applying said Statutes.

FIRST POINT IN ARGUMENT: The rule as to the lack of jurisdiction by a District Court to proceed further in a case after judgment, and while an appeal therefrom is pending, is well established and the authorities collated on page 8 of the preceeding petition for certiorari. As shown in the preceeding petition for writ, the established rule is that an appeal from a final judgment vests in the appellate court jurisdiction of the case, and divests the trial court of all other jurisdiction with reference to the judgment rendered, so long as the appeal is pending. The decisions of this court and numerous Circuit Courts of Appeal have applied this rule to many different orders entered in cases after judgment and while appeal is pending therefrom. There is no decision inconsistent with the rule as stated.

Respondents argued in the Circuit Court of Appeals that the rule was not applicable because the Federal Courts hold that a judgment though appealed from is res adjudicata between the parties until reversed. This argument begs the question. The point is not that the judgment is res adjudicata between the parties until reversed, but the point is the power of the court to render another judgment in the same case while appeal from a final judgment is pending.

The second judgment was in effect a proceeding whereby an execution was awarded on a cause of action determined in the first judgment and which execution was not awarded as a part of the first judgment. The case of Sinclair Refining Co. v. Burris, 133 F. 2d 536, is the only case, so far as petitioners are advised, in which the specific question has been even remotely discussed. In that case it was stated that a declaratory judgment only fixes the rights of the parties, which rights may be enforced in a separate suit. The reasonable inference from this holding is that the proceeding to enforce the declaratory judgment must wait until that judgment becomes final. It has been held that the ordinary rule as to judgments will apply to an appeal from a declaratory judgment. Borchard's "Declaratory Judgments" page 255.

Numerous cases hold that Section 400, Title 28 U.S.C.A., did not add to the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts, nor does it change the essential requisites of Federal Jurisdiction. Agnew & Co. v. Hoague, 99 F. 2d 349; Miles Laboratories v. Fed. Trade Commission, 140 F. 2d 683.

It is respectfully submitted that the trial court was without jurisdiction to enter the judgment of January 12, 1946, pending the appeal from said declaratory judgment.

SECOND POINT IN ARGUMENT: Respondents alleged that petitioners were guarantors. (R. 3). The notes upon which judgment was rendered, disclosed that petitioners liability for said notes was contained in a guaranty contract written on the back of each of said notes. (R. 61 to 66). The collateral agreement executed at the same time, pledged the stock of said corporation owned by petitioners, recites that the notes are guaranteed by George W. Armstrong Sr. (R. 67). The application for surety bonds does not refer to said notes, but only to said bonds to be executed by respondent as guarantor, and indemnifies respondent from losses by reason of having signed said bonds. No contracts of indemnity to respondents for the payment of said notes is anywhere shown. The record in the declaratory proceeding shows that all parties understood the undertaking of Geo. W. Armstrong to that of a Guarantor. P. 20 accompanying Petition Texasteel Manufacturing Co. The record conclusively shows that judgment was rendered against petitioners by virtue of their contract of guaranty, written on the back of said notes. Petitioners were sureties for the Texasteel Manufacturing Company to respondents. The judgment against petitioners was not sought, nor rendered against them, as indemnitors. If it had, the judgment would have been confined to the amount paid or incurred by respondent as surety for said manufacturing company. First State Bank v. Wallace, 165 S. W. 595; Eller v. Irving, 265 S. W. 595;

U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Paulk, 155 S. W. 2d 100. As shown by the authorities cited in the preceeding petition, the contract of guaranty is a separate and independent contract; that George W. Armstrong Sr. was not a signer nor indorser of either of said notes, therefore, the provision that indorser or signer shall be liable is not applicable to him. This is also true as to the liability of Allen J. Armstrong on the $100,000.00, note signed by George W. Armstrong, and as to liability of George W. Armstrong for the $100,000.00 note, signed by Allen J. Armstrong; that said contract was one of guaranty is decided in the following cases: Guaranty Etc. v. Singleton (Tex. Civ. App.) 85 S. W. 2d 803; Central Trust Company v. Manley (5th Cir.) 100 F. 2d 993; Woods v. Canfield Paper Co., 117 Tex. 399; Sidwell v. First National Bank of Colorado, 233 Pac. 153, 154.

The jurisdiction in this case, depends on diversity of citizenship, and the Texas Statutes shown in the appendix are applicable. Erie v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64; Huddleston v. Dwyer, 322 U. S. 232; Guaranty Trust Co. v. York, 326 U. S. 99.

Prior to the decision in Woods v. Canfield Paper Co., 117 Tex. 397, the Texas Court of Civil Appeals had held that where the guaranty involved was unconditional, the above statutes did not apply. These holdings were in fact overruled in Wood v. Canfield Paper Company. This case has been consistently followed and the law there declared had not been questioned since the rendition of that decision.

The Texas Statutes are applicable here. It is shown by the records in the first suit, that petitioners signed said note at the request of respondent, who was in charge of the operations at Port Arthur, and who desired these loans to be made in order to finance said operations. (R. 98-99). Attention is called to the decree in In Re Kelly Springfield Tire Company, Tex. 10 Fed. Supp. 414, Hastings v. Byers, 40 N. Y. S. 2d 299; affirmed 57 N. N. E. 2d 733; Cert. denied 324 U. S. 860; that the approval of the petition of reorganization, and the appointment of Trustee, was not an adjudication of insolvency as that term is used, and has been defined, by the Supreme Court of Texas. Smith v. Oberjohns, 93 Tex. 55.

THIRD POINT: This point has been argued under specification of errors one and two in companion appeal Texasteel Mfg. Co. v. Seaboard Surety Co., p. 21. Supporting Brief pp. 53-56.

CONCLUSION

Petitioner respectfully submits that the Circuit Court of Appeals was in error in holding that the trial court is justified to render judgment against petitioner in the same case, after final judgment for which an appeal is pending, and further erred in holding that petitioners were primary obligors on the notes in question, and could be sued and judgment rendered against them, without the presence of the principal debtor, and without a showing of want of jurisdiction of the principal debtor, or is solvent, and that the Texas Statute shown in the appendix was not applicable.

WHEREFORE petitioner prays that the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals and the trial court be reviewed for further proceeding in accordance with the opinion of this court.

Respectfully submitted,

APPENDIX B

ART. 1986

The acceptor of a bill of exchange, or a principal obligor in a contract may be sued either alone or jointly with any other party who may be liable thereon; but no judgment shall be rendered against a party not primarily liable on such bill or other contract, unless judgment be also rendered against such acceptor or other principal obligor, except where the plaintiff may discontinue his suit against such principal obligor as hereinafter provided.

ART. 1987

The assignor, indorser, guarantor and surety upon a contract, and the drawer of a bill which has been accepted, may be sued without suing the maker, acceptor or other principal obligor, when the principal obligor resides beyond the limits of the State, or where he cannot be reached by the ordinary process of law, or when his residence is unknown and cannot be ascertained by the use of reasonable diligence, or when he is dead, or actually or notoriously insolvent.

ART. 6251

No surety shall be sued, unless his principal is joined with him, or unless a judgment has previously been rendered against his principal, except in the cases otherwise provided for in the laws relating to parties to suits.

ON PETITIONS FOR WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR SEABOARD SURETY COMPANY IN OPPOSITION TO THE PETITIONS FOR WRITS OF CERTIORARI.

Opinion Below.

Opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, is reported at 158 F. 2nd 90.[1]

Jurisdiction.

The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals in both cases was entered on December 6, 1946. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 240 (a) of the Judicial Code (U. S. Code, Title 28, Paragraph 347).

Questions Presented.

1. Is jurisdiction conferred upon the District Court by the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act where controversies exist between a surety and its indemnitors as to liability on indemnity agreements and on promissory notes; where indemnitors assert liability against the surety for continuing losses from manufacturing operations being sustained daily by the surety's principal; and where the surety was being called upon to extend additional credits in behalf of its principal in order that the principal might perform its contracts?

(Affirmed by the Circuit Court.)

2. Did the District Court have jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for a declaratory judgment between a surety and its corporate principal which appeared and joined in the prayer for an adjudication of the controversies, while the corporation was in reorganization under Chapter X?

(Affirmed by the Circuit Court.)

3. Did the Trial Court err in its holding that there was no evidence on factual issues for a jury?

(Negatived by the Circuit Court.)

[1] The Opinion and Judgment of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas is at R. 147.

4. Did the District Court have jurisdiction to grant further relief by entering monetary judgments based upon a prior declaratory judgment where a petition for such further relief was filed prior to the taking of an appeal from the declaratory judgment?

(Affirmed by the Circuit Court.)

5. Were monetary judgments against the individual petitioners entered in disregard of Texas law dealing with the rights of parties secondarily liable, where petitioners had agreed that all signers and endorsers on a promissory note were to be regarded as principals, and where the individuals were primarily liable for the same obligation under a separate indemnity agreement?

(Negatived by the Circuit Court.)

Statement.

Suit was brought by the respondent on December 9, 1944 for a declaration of rights and liabilities on the various substantial controversies between the parties (R. 29, 2, 75, 91, 112, 128, 134).[2] Trial resulted in a directed verdict on March 8, 1945 in favor of the respondent (R. 138, 1009). Judgment was entered on May 2, 1945 (R. 147). On July 30, 1945, the petitioners filed an appeal (2 R. 37).

On July 19, 1945, the respondent filed a petition for further relief, based upon the declaratory judgment, seeking monetary judgments (2 R. 2, 28-31). After hearing on August 20, 1945, judgments totalling $623,906.25 were entered for the respondent on January 12, 1946 against the petitioners George W. Armstrong, Allen J Armstrong and George W. Armstrong, Jr., but execution was stayed during the pendency of appeal (2 R. 108). No monetary judgment was entered against Texasteel Manufacturing Company [3] (2 R. 123). Petitioners filed an appeal on February 2, 1946 (2 R. 123).

By stipulation and by order of the Circuit Court of Appeals, the two appeals were argued together. On December 6, 1946, the judgments of the District Court in both appeals were affirmed. The questions presented by the two applications for certiorari arise out of the same subject matter, and the respondent is therefore filing the same brief in both cases.

In the summer of 1941, the petitioner Texasteel entered into three contracts with the U. S. Navy Bureau of Ordnance [4] to manufacture 364,000 five-inch shells and 20,000 six-inch shells for an aggregate price of $4,837,191.00, and procured from the Navy Bureau advance payments of $585,844.00 on two of the contracts (R. 183, 198, 209, 640, 641). Deliveries were to commence in January, 1942, and were to be substantially completed by July, 1942 (R. 638). In the fall of 1941, Texasteel, being in need of facilities for manufacturing the shells, entered into a facilities contract with the Navy Bureau whereby Texasteel obtained $550,000.00 from the Navy Bureau for that purpose (R. 816).

Respondent, as surety, and Texasteel, as principal, furnished to the Navy Bureau bonds for the performance of these various contracts (R. 195, 201, 211, 489) and for the repayment of the advance payments (R. 192, 204, 489). Petitioners, George W. Armstrong, George W. Armstrong, Jr., Allen J. Armstrong and Mary C. Armstrong owned all the stock of Texasteel. They executed agreements to indemnify respondent against all liability, loss, costs, damages and expenses resulting from its furnishing of the various bonds (R. 189-191, 198, 200, 243, 180, 217).

[3] "Texasteel" is used throughout to designate "Texasteel Manufacturing Company".

[4] "Navy Bureau" is used throughout to designate "U. S. Navy Bureau of Ordnance".

Respondent's first notice of trouble came when, on February 10, 1942, the Navy Bureau wrote it that Texasteel's ability to perform its shell contracts was in serious question and that deliveries under one of the contracts were already in default (R. 650).

Additional facilities were needed at Port Arthur before shells could be produced, for, as became apparent by February, 1942, only about one-third of the needed shell making machinery had been included in the petitioners' original plan. To cure this deficiency, the petitioners, in late March, 1942, requested additional funds from the Navy Bureau, and submitted on April 1, 1942, new plans and specifications in which the itemized cost of the required additional machinery was placed at $880,000.00 (R. 684, 334, 335).

The Navy Bureau launched an inquiry. Between April 3, 1942—when (at a Bureau conference attended by Allen J. Armstrong and George W. Armstrong) Commander Hagen expressed emphatic belief that Texasteel could not properly manage the project and recommended refusal of additional facilities and removal of existing facilities (R. 921)—and June 2, 1942, it sent three investigators, including its chief engineer, to Port Arthur and received adverse reports from each as to the Texasteel management (R. 935-940, 922-924, 925-933).

In the last of these reports, the inspector recommended that the requested facilities be allowed, "provided that George W. Armstrong, Sr., Allen J. Armstrong and John Foster be removed from any office or position they hold" (R. 932). George W. Armstrong, Sr., and Allen J. Armstrong, petitioners, were Board Chairman and President of Texasteel. John Foster was Financial Officer for its Port Arthur operations.

On the day that this report was received, Admiral W. H. P. Blandy, Bureau Chief, summoned T. V. O'Neill, a representative of respondent, before the members of the Navy Bureau at Washington, and informed him that additional funds for facilities would be granted to Texasteel only in the event that George W. Armstrong, Sr., Allen J. Armstrong and John Foster sever their connection with the Navy shell making operations of Texasteel. He requested O'Neill to go to Texas and inform the petitioners of the Bureau's position (R. 220-222). O'Neill replied that he did not consider such step necessary, but if such was the Navy Bureau's requirement, it should evidence it with a letter (R. 221). Admiral Blandy wrote, and delivered to O'Neill, such a letter (R. 225-226).

When O'Neill informed petitioners Allen J. Armstrong and George W. Armstrong of the Navy Bureau's demand, they flatly refused to resign (R. 228, 798). The petitioners then conferred with their attorney, and adopted company resolutions drafted by him, providing that Port Arthur management would be placed in the hands of a management committee consisting of George W. Armstrong, Jr., and T. V. O'Neill, to act for and on behalf of Texasteel (R. 666, 65-66, 69, 230-231). The Navy Bureau was prevailed upon to forego its condition precedent to granting further funds, and to accept, in its stead, the petitioners' counter proposal (R. 898, 230, 235-237). On July 8, 1942, the Navy Bureau made available to Texasteel approximately $927,000.00 to be used to purchase the additional shell making facilities (R. 851, 816).

Texasteel's management committee, under the direction and supervision of its Board of Directors (R. 847-71, 876, 883), proceeded from the date of its appointment in June 1942, to acquire and install machinery, obtain raw materials, hire labor, and to prepare generally to make shells under the Navy contracts. Not until June, 1943, two years after the making of the contracts and one year after the company had originally obligated itself to complete them, was production begun, and then on a very limited scale (R. 283).

On November 30, 1943, all three shell contracts being materially in default, the Navy Bureau indicated that unless increased production was shown by February, 1944 (within 60 days), the shell contracts would be canceled for nonperformance (R. 431). Provisions were contained in each contract which authorized the Navy, upon default in performance, to buy shells of a similar character upon the outside market (Art. 5 of Shell Contracts, R. 183, 198, 209), or to cause the contracts to be performed by third-party shell makers (R. 183, 198, 209), all damages or added costs accruing, to be assessed against Texasteel and the respondent surety (R. 183, 198, 209). In the final analysis, the respondent surety would have recourse against the petitioners upon their indemnities (R. 217).

Texasteel's operating capital being exhausted, the petitioners again turned to the respondent for assistance. On the strength of the petitioners' promissory note, supported by their company's resolutions and by stock pledges previously given by the petitioners to the respondent, and now made available by the respondent for the petitioners' pressing need, and supported also by the respondent's additional suretyship, for which the petitioners executed a new indemnity agreement, Continental National Bank of Fort Worth loaned $350,000.00 on December 8, 1943 (R. 498, 322-332, 504-508, 513-514, 515-516, 517, 520). Texasteel received the loan proceeds (R. 388).

In March, 1944, the petitioners again borrowed from Continental National Bank to obtain additional working capital for Texasteel. This time, loan funds amounting to $200,000.00, obtained on the petitioners' promissory notes, supported by the stock pledges and by the respondent's additional suretyship, for which the petitioners executed new indemnity agreements, were made available to Texasteel (R. 500, 502, 501, 503, 496, 494, 518, 867).

Shell production, though improved, still lagged far behind contract requirements, and the Navy Bureau on June 28, 1944, sent Texasteel a cancellation notice on one of the three shell contracts, for default in performance (R. 341).

Texasteel, as principal, and the respondent, as surety, on July 6, 1944, jointly wrote the Navy Bureau, requesting withdrawal of the cancellation notice and urging recognition of Texasteel's need for the lightening of amortization provisions whereby 40¢ of each shell payment dollar was being withheld by the Navy Bureau and applied to repayment of advance payments, inasmuch as it had become apparent that shells could not be made with the fractional (60%) payments which Texasteel was receiving (R. 344-350).

On July 29, 1944, following a Navy Bureau hearing attended by representatives of the petitioners and the respondent, the Navy Bureau indicated that it would withdraw the notice and grant a moratorium in amortization payments, provided that Texasteel would maintain a scheduled rate of production, and that Texasteel and the respondent, as surety, would reaffirm the bond obligations (R. 465-470).

Petitioners refused to reaffirm the bond obligations, and charged, in letters to respondent and others, that the respondent, and not Texasteel, nor themselves as indemnitors, was liable for Texasteel's operating losses (R. 367, 368, 369, 472).

By August 18, 1944, a stalemate had been reached, and the parties mutually agreed upon the filing, on that day, of a petition for the reorganization of Texasteel, and upon the appointment of a Trustee (R. 453-454). The Trustee took over the operations of Texasteel under the Court's direction, and was authorized to sell, from time to time, Trustee's Certificates to obtain funds to continue the contract performance at Port Arthur (R. 144-145).

The Trustee found no market for selling certificates except with the aid of the respondent's guaranty to the purchaser (R. 382). Between August 18, 1944 and February 26, 1945 (when the respondent's suit for declaratory judgment came to trial), the respondent furnished its guaranty to the purchaser of certificates in the aggregate sum of $515,000.00 to procure for the Trustee an equivalent amount of funds for operating capital necessary to the performance of Texasteel's Navy shell contracts (R. 379).

Following the Trustee's appointment on August 18, 1944, the petitioners supplemented their claims of financial immunity for Port Arthur losses with damage claims and claims of fraud and duress against the respondent (R. 8-9, 477, 418, 370-373, 382, 120-130).

The $200,000.00 Continental National Bank notes became due on September 1, 1944 (2 R. 64-65), and on December 11, 1944, no payment having been made, the bank demanded payment from the Trustee and from the petitioners (R. 311). The $350,000.00 note was a demand note (R. 498), and payment having been refused (R. 311), the bank in early January, 1945 made demand on the respondent to honor its guaranty. Respondent complied on January 8, 1945 by paying the bank $550,000.00, with interest (R. 312), and took assignments of the notes and pledges securing them (2 R. 77, 314).

On December 9, 1944, the respondent filed its petition for a declaration of the rights and liabilities in controversy (2 R. 3) at a time when operating losses were continuing and additional guarantees on Trustee's Certificates were being required.

Texasteel, answering by its Trustee, and George W. Armstrong, Sr. and his wife, Mary C. Armstrong (joint owners of 80% of Texasteel stock) joined in the respondent's request for a declaration of correlative rights and liabilities of the parties (R. 94-95, 133-134). No motion to dismiss was filed by either of them (R. 94, 133). The Trustee, seeking affirmative monetary relief, asked the Court to declare the petitioners' notes, bonds and indemnities void; that the respondent be adjudged liable for Texasteel's operational losses and expenses, and for damages against the respondent approximating $1,000,000.00 (R. 91-95). The answer of the petitioners, George W. Armstrong, Sr. and wife, majority stockholders, was of similar general import (R. 2-9).

At the time of bringing suit, the aggregate amount of suretyship which the respondent had furnished Texasteel, in reliance upon the indemnifications of the petitioners, was approximately $2,880,000.00 (R. 376).

Argument.

I. A declaratory judgment was a proper remedy in this case where petitioners denied liability on certain notes held by respondent and on their agreements to indemnify respondent; where they asserted that respondent was liable for the losses which had resulted from the manufacturing operations of petitioner Texasteel and which were being sustained during the subsequent Trusteeship; and where respondent was being called upon to guarantee additional Trustee's certificates in order that the Trustee might continue performance of the contracts.

In seeking to raise a question within Supreme Court Rule 38, 5, (b), the petitioners assert that the decision of the Circuit Court is in conflict with the decision in Angell v. Schram, 109 Fed. 2nd 380 (Sixth Circuit, 1940).[5] They cite the Angell case for the proposition that a declaratory judgment is not appropriate where the rights of the parties have become fixed.

There is nothing in that decision to that effect, but if there were, it would not affect us here. When the respondent's petition for a declaratory judgment was filed, the parties' rights and liabilities had not been fixed, nor will they become so finally until this ligitation is concluded. Petitioners' liability upon the bank notes, as is conclusively shown by their Petition and Supporting Brief, has not been fixed to their satisfaction, nor do they recognize that the respondent's non-liability to them was fixed by the declaratory decree and its affirmance by the Circuit Court of Appeals. In Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U. S. 227, 81 L. Ed. 617 (1937), the dispute which this Court held to be appropriate for declaratory judgment was described in these words:

[5] Petitioners' Brief, Cause No. 1226, p. 22.

> "It calls, not for an advisory opinion upon a hypothetical basis, but for an adjudication of present right upon established facts" (p. 242).

The suggestion of the petitioners[6] that declaratory judgment proceedings will not lie where there is another adequate remedy is directly contrary to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure which have been approved by this Court. Rule 57 provides:

> "The existence of another adequate remedy does not preclude a judgment for declaratory relief in cases where it is appropriate. . . ."

The other objection of the petitioners to the use of this remedy is that the issues have become moot.[7] The best proof that the issues remain alive is that this matter is being contested to the highest Court in the country.

Before and after the start of reorganization proceedings, the petitioners charged that the respondent had dominated and controlled the Port Arthur operations of Texasteel from 1942 forward, and that it was liable for all losses sustained in performance of the shell contracts (R. 369, 471). Since that time they have made numerous charges with respect to the rights and liabilities between the respondent and the petitioners. They have denied any liability on the various indemnity agreements (R. 367-368-369, 472). They have asserted the invalidity of the stock escrow agreements (R. 9, 120, 477-478). They have denied any liability arising out of the $550,000.00 in notes (R. 477-478). They have charged the respondent with fraud and misrepresentations (R. 120). They have asserted that the respondent instigated the proceedings for the reorganization of Texasteel for the purpose of obtaining control of that company's assets and that the respondent procured the appointment of a disqualified trustee through whom it continued to dominate and control the Port Arthur operations (R. 124-125, 477-478). These various charges have been made from time to time since August, 1944 right up to the present time as appears from the Petitions for Certiorari.

[6] Petitioners' Brief, Cause No. 1226, pp. 56-57.
[7] Petitioner's Brief, Cause No. 1226, pp. 3-4.

Respondent was not required to remain in the state of uncertainty created by these numerous and oft repeated charges of the petitioners. Based upon the petitioners' assertions, every day's operation by the Trustee (and his operation was losing money) was being charged against the respondent. Nor could the respondent intelligently pass on the wisdom of guaranteeing additional Trustee's Certificates without knowing its rights under the previous indemnity agreements. Petitioners' claims were not limited to the Trustee's operational losses and expenses either, for their damage claim had then reached $2,000,000.00, and was increasing daily. Respondent therefore filed its Petition for the declaratory judgment.

The Trial Court recognized the propriety of the declaratory judgment proceedings in these words:

> ". . . In view of all of these controversies and threatened suits, in view of this further prospect, if the rights of these parties are not declared, that this defense plant was really going to be closed down. I know I have never had any declaratory suits where there was as much powerful and strong appeal, I should think far beyond the contemplation of this suit, for immediate declaration of the rights of these parties, and why it would not be to the interest of everybody. You have got these rights, of course they are not going to be determined by future happenings; they are determined by what has already happened, of course . . ." (R. 176).

Each one of the controversial issues is "appropriate for judicial determination". The controversies, here, are certainly "definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse legal interests." Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, supra. The propriety of a declaratory judgment in a situation where, as here, the moving party seeks, inter alia, a declaration of non-liability on claims asserted by the defending party, was clearly recognized in that opinion.

Petitioners' challenge of the propriety of declaratory relief in this case is completely unfounded in view of the controversial issues presented, the decisions of this Court typified by the Aetna Life Insurance Company case, supra, and the provisions of Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. No conflict between decisions exists. The Petions reveal no issue on this point requiring review by this Court.

II. The fact that Texasteel was in corporate reorganization under Chapter X of the Bankruptcy Act did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction over the petition for declaratory judgment.

Petitioners contend that the instant decision conflicts with the Ninth Circuit's decision in Moore v. Scott, 55 Fed. 2nd 863 (Ninth Circuit, 1932), and with other decisions cited at pages 21 and 22 of their Brief in Cause No. 1226. They claim that conflict results from the entry of a declaratory judgment against Texasteel when that corporation was in reorganization proceedings.[8] Their statements therein are considered insufficient and inaccurate, and cause the submission of the following statement: Honorable James C. Wilson, Federal Judge, Northern District of Texas, Fort Worth Division, at the request of the attorneys for the petitioners and the respondent, appointed J. Mac. Thompson as Trustee of Texasteel in August, 1944 (R. 454). Subsequent thereto, the respondent, in December, 1944, filed suit for a declaration of the correlative rights and liabilities of the petitioners and the respondent (2 R. 3). This declaratory suit and the subsequent monetary proceeding were both tried before Judge James C. Wilson (R. 1; 2 R. 1). The Trustee (who was operating Texasteel under the direction and instruction of the appointing Court) sought by his Answer to augment assets of Texasteel by monetary recoveries against the respondent (R. 91-95). In his Answer, he requested and prayed for the cancellation of the $550,000.00 Continental Bank notes, the cancellation of all Texasteel indemnities, and for the recovery of damages against the respondent (R. 91-95).

The Trial Court refused to enter a monetary judgment against Texasteel, the pertinent part of its findings in that respect being: "I further conclude that inasmuch as Texasteel Manufacturing Company is involved in a bankruptcy proceeding in this court, no judgment should be rendered herein against said Texasteel Manufacturing Company or its Trustee . . ." (2 R. 123).

Petitioners urge that the decision of the Circuit Court is contrary to decisions in the other Circuits in holding that the District Court had jurisdiction over Texasteel for the purpose of these proceedings.[9] The decisions cited by the petitioners deal with "proceedings" in bankruptcy as distinguished from "controversies". Most of them are concerned with straight bankruptcy, and those dealing with corporate reorganization are not in point. These cases deal with situations where other than bankruptcy courts sought to administer or deplete the assets of bankrupt estates. They are, therefore, inapplicable to the present situation.

Section 116 (4), Article III, of Chapter X, 11 USCA 516 provides that, upon the approval of a petition, the judge may[10]

[9] Petitioners' Brief, Cause No. 1226, p. 20.

[10] The italics used throughout this Brief are respondent's.

> "enjoin or stay until final decree the commencement or continuation of a suit against the debtor or its trustee . . ."

This section of Chapter X clearly recognizes that suits may be properly brought in other Courts against a corporation undergoing reorganization.

The power of another Court to entertain a suit against a corporation undergoing reorganization under the bankruptcy laws was clearly recognized by this Court in Foust v. Munson Steamship Lines, 299 U. S. 77, 81 L. Ed. 49 (1936). In that case an administrator brought an action in a State Court against the Steamship Lines under the Merchant Marine Act for the wrongful death of the decedent mariner. After a petition for reorganization of the Steamship Lines under 77B had been filed, the administrator petitioned the bankruptcy court for leave to continue the State Court Suit. This Court reversed the action of the Court below in denying leave to proceed, and said:

> "In reorganization proceedings neither the Act nor any rule of law entitles debtors or trustees as a matter of right to enjoin the trial of action such as that brought by petitioner. The court is to exercise the power conferred by subd. (c) (10) according to the particular circumstances of the case and is to be guided by considerations that under the law make for the ascertainment of what is just to the claimants, the debtor and the estate" (pp. 53-54).
> "There is nothing in the record to warrant a finding that liquidation of petitioner's claim by trial of his pending action at law would hinder, burden, delay or be at all inconsistent with the pending corporate reorganization proceeding under 77B" (p. 56).

Although the State Court suit involved in that decision had been instituted prior to the filing of the petition for reorganization, this Court attached no significance to that fact in its reasoning and holding. The provisions of Section 77B (c) (10) referred to as the source of the power to stay are similar to those of Section 116 (4) of Chapter X quoted above. Both refer to "commencement" and "continuance" of suits.

It should be noted that the Trustee of Texasteel filed an Answer denying the allegations of the respondent's Petition for declaratory judgment (R. 91-95), and joined in requesting that "the liabilities and non-liabilities of this defendant (Texasteel) and the plaintiff (the respondent) be settled and adjusted . . ." (R. 94). The representative of the bankruptcy court has therefore affirmatively approved the commencement and continuation of this action.

The quoted provision of Chapter X and the decision of the Court on the application of the similar provision of 77B are a complete answer to the petitioners' contention in this regard. There is, therefore, no need for a review of this question by this Court.

III. The decision of the Court Below that there was no evidence for a jury on factual issues, properly applied the pertinent state and federal authorities.

The petitioners claim error in the Trial Court's refusal to submit an issue on duress.[11] Their claim is based on these facts: In March, 1942, the petitioners pledged their Texasteel stock with respondent as additional security for its suretyship obligations (R. 238). The pledge instrument authorized the respondent to vote the stock if the United States Government, or any branch thereof, should advise it that a change in management or policy of Texasteel was necessary in order to prevent the Government from declaring a default (R. 240). On June 6, 1942, the Navy Bureau, through its Chief, wrote the respondent that changes in management personnel of Texasteel were a condition precedent to the granting of additional funds (R. 226). Shell contract NORD 150 was then five (5) months behind schedule. Deliveries, as contracted, were to be "2000 by January, 1942, and 2000 per month thereafter" (R. 199). No shells had then been manufactured. By deposition, the petitioner, Allen J. Armstrong, testified that after he had refused to resign from Texasteel's management, as was then demanded by the Navy Bureau, the respondent's agent said, "if he persisted in that adamant attitude that the Seaboard Surety Company might have to exercise its rights under the escrow agreement, and he never did say what they would do, but the inference was clear" (R. 665).

When this petitioner was upon the witness stand at the trial of the declaratory proceeding, he testified that the respondent "had the legal right to oust us from the corporation under the terms of the escrow agreement of March 28, which provided that in the event of notice from the Navy that a change in management or policy would be necessary to obviate default of the contract, the Seaboard Surety Company might take over the voting power of the stock of both the Texas Steel and the Texasteel Manufacturing Company. That right we did not question" (R. 666). The respondent in fact never exercised such rights.

The threat must be wrongful before duress results. The Texas case of Ward v. Scarborough (Commission of Appeals), 236 S. W. 434 (1922), upon which the petitioner relies for conflict states the following rule: "Duress of property cannot exist without there being a threat to do some act which the threatening party has no legal right to do . . . some illegal exaction or some fraud or deception" (p. 437). Had the Trial Court ruled differently, the decision would have conflicted with Ward v. Scarborough, supra.

The Trial Court found that the evidence wholly failed to raise any issue of fact triable by a jury (R. 146), and therefore directed a verdict for the respondent. Petitioners assert that they were thereby denied their constitutional right to trial by jury.[12] However, a directed verdict involves no constitutional question where the evidence raises no issue of fact for a jury to determine. Galloway v. U. S., 319 U. S. 372, 87 L. Ed. 1858 (1943).

Petitioners argue generally that the evidence presented Jury questions, and that the direction of a verdict was therefore not in accord with State and Federal decisions.[13] Actually, there was no failure to follow State or Federal decisions. There was simply a determination that there was no evidence for the jury on any factual issue. It is obvious that the petitioners are asking this Court to review all the evidence in the case and determine whether there was any evidence to go to a jury on any of these factual issues. This is not the type of question which Rule 38, 5, (b) contemplates. The District Court considered the evidence and found no issues of fact. The Circuit Court reviewed the evidence and affirmed this conclusion. There is no need for a third consideration of the facts by this Court.

Petitioners assert that the Court below improperly imposed upon them the burden of proving these facts.[14] The Trial Court found as follows:

> "The evidence did not raise any issue of fraud or duress, and did not raise any fact issue to make the plaintiff liable to the defendants, or to any of them. The evidence wholly failed to raise any fact issue triable to a jury." (R. 146)

Obviously, the Trial Court determined the issues on the evidence, irrespective of the burden of proof.

IV. The appeal from the declaratory judgment did not prevent the District Court from granting further relief by entering monetary judgments against the individual petitioners.

The declaratory judgment was entered by the District Court on May 19, 1945 (R. 147). It declared the liability of Texasteel and the three Armstrong petitioners on the three notes totaling $550,000.00 and on the various indemnity agreements (R. 154-157). On July 19, 1945, based on this judgment, the respondent petitioned for money judgments against the three Armstrongs (2 R. 2), who thereafter on July 30, 1945, appealed to the Circuit Court from the declaratory judgment (2 R. 108). On January 12, 1946, the District Court entered monetary judgments in accordance with the prayer of the petition (2 R. 108).

Petitioners contend that the District Court did not have jurisdiction to enter these monetary judgments while the appeal from the declaratory judgments was pending.[15] No case cited by the petitioners so holds. Subdivision (2) of the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act authorizes the procedure of which the petitioners complain. It reads:

> "Further relief based on a declaratory judgment or decree may be granted whenever necessary or proper. The application shall be by petition to a court having jurisdiction to grant the relief. If the application be deemed sufficient, the court shall, on reasonable notice, require any adverse party whose rights have been adjudicated by the declaration, to show cause why further relief should not be granted forthwith" (Title 28, Sec. 400, Judicial Code).

If the respondent had sought and obtained a monetary judgment with accompanying foreclosure at the time it commenced its declaratory proceedings on December 9, 1944, such action would have rendered even more precarious the status of the shell contracts, and could have destroyed the petitioners' ownership in both Armstrong corporations. The respondent in paragraph 6 of its Petition for declaratory relief, summed up its position in these words:

> "And in this connection, the Court is informed that it has not here requested a monetary judgment against the defendants for the amounts owed by them upon said notes, nor has it requested a foreclosure of its lien and pledges, its desire being to continue to cooperate with the trustee in the performance of said contracts, to the end that the United States Navy may obtain the benefit of needed shells, and with the hope that, through such cooperation, the Port Arthur losses might be minimized, or wholly met, but in making the allegations immediately foregoing, the plaintiff, makes its position that its failure to here and now request a monetary judgment upon said notes and a foreclosure of its pledge and liens is without prejudice to its rights to such reliefs, either before or during trial of this case, by due amendment, or by subsequent request for further relief, in this, or in some other, Court, based upon any declaratory judgment or decree which may be granted by this Court, or by the exercise of any other remedy to recover a monetary judgment and a foreclosure, whether legal or equitable, which the said plaintiff might possess." (R. 48-49)

But on July 14, 1945, after the entry of the declaratory judgment, the reason for the respondent's refraining from requesting a monetary judgment with the accompanying foreclosure no longer prevailed, for, the war in Europe having ended, the Navy Bureau then exercised its right to terminate the shell contracts (2 R. 107).

Following such termination, the respondent on July 19, 1945, filed its Petition for further relief wherein it alleged that, the Navy Bureau having terminated the shell contracts on July 14th, "no reason exists for now denying to the plaintiff coercive judgments against the defendants, jointly and severally, for the amounts owed upon the said notes, principal, interest and attorney's fees, with a foreclosure of the pledges securing the payments thereof'' (2 R. 8).

When this Petition for further relief was filed, the declaratory judgment had not been appealed from (2 R. 2, 37).

The Trial Court, upon the filing of the respondent's Petition for further relief, issued notice to the petitioners whose rights had been adjudicated by the declaration, to show cause on August 9, 1945, why the requested relief should not be granted forthwith (Court's Finding of Fact, 2 R. 116-117).

At the hearing which followed, the Court (in keeping with subdivision (2) of the Declaratory Judgment Act), stated that it considered it proper to grant the respondent's request for further relief, based upon the declaratory judgment, and that, in its opinion, the petitioners had failed to show cause why such relief should not be then granted (2 R. 38). The Court stated from the bench:

> ''It seems to me the proper time—I do not say that it is necessary—but the proper time for plaintiff to come in and ask for relief as provided for under the Act, and relief forthwith—in other words I do not see any reason why it should not be construed relief without any unreasonable delay, similar to the guarantee of a man when he indicated for a speedy trial, without any unreasonable delay. Of course any delay that is unnecessary in either instance would be an unreasonable delay, and it does not give any limit on existing circumstances or conditions. It says they may come in after they get their judgment, and they have that here, and cite the parties to show cause why that relief should not be given to them. Now I do not understand that the relief they are asking for here is what you gentlemen representing the defendant seem to understand it to be.

I understand this relief that they are really calling for here, since the Court has decided these instruments valid, is simply for judgment on those instruments." (2 R. 38)

The liability established by the Court's earlier declaratory judgment was not vacated by the subsequent appeal therefrom, and the declarations therein decreed were admissable in evidence in the subsequent monetary suit, as proof of the prior adjudication of such facts. Kansas Pacific Railway Company v. Twombly, 100 U. S. 78, 25 L. Ed. 550 (1879); Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 48 L. Ed. 276 (1903); Butler v. Eaton, 141 U. S. 240, 35 L. Ed. 713 (1891); Dupont Company v. Richmond Company, 297 Fed. 580 (Fourth Circuit, 1924).

The Trial Court followed to the letter the provisions of the Declaratory Judgment Act. Having determined that the petitioners had failed to show cause why further relief should not be granted forthwith, the Court entered the monetary judgments, the evidence having shown that it was proper to do so.

The petitioners do not assert that the Trial Court erroneously exercised a judicial discretion vested by the Statute in determining that it was proper to then enter the monetary judgments, but contend that the Court was without jurisdiction to do so. By reason of the express provisions of the Act, the petitioners' contention is without merit.

V. The entry of the monetary judgments was not in disregard of the Texas decisions and Texas statutes relied upon by the petitioners. Those authorities apply to parties whose liability is secondary.

The petitioners claim conflict between the Fifth Circuit's instant decision and the decision in Wood v. Canfield Paper Company, 117 Texas 399 (1928), 5 S. W. 748, by the Supreme Court of that state. The claim is that their liability to respondent upon the Continental National Bank notes is secondary, while that of Texasteel is primary, and that the decision in Wood v. Canfield precludes judgment against a party not primarily liable on a note or other contract, unless judgment be also rendered against the principal obligor.[16]

The following additional facts are submitted:

In December, 1943, Texasteel was financially unable to proceed with performance of its shell contracts (R. 416, 322, 323). The Continental National Bank of Fort Worth, upon being approached by the petitioners, was willing to lend Texasteel $350,000.00 upon condition that the petitioners, George W. Armstrong, Sr., Allen J. Armstrong, and George W. Armstrong, Jr., also obligate themselves upon the note. Another condition was that the respondent unconditionally guarantee payment thereof (R. 331).

The three Armstrong petitioners agreed to endorse it and did so, provision being contained in the body thereof that "all signers and endorsers are to be regarded as principals so far as their liability to payee is concerned" (R. 326).

Before the respondent delivered its guaranty to the lending bank, it obtained from each of the three Armstrong petitioners an agreement jointly and severally to indemnify it and hold it harmless "from and against any and all liability, damages, losses, costs, charges and expenses of whatever kind or nature which the Surety shall or may, at any time, sustain or incur by reason or in consequence" of having executed the guaranty (2 R. 69-71). The financial statements of the individual petitioners subsequently received by the respondent showed their combined net worth as being $5,348,733.75 (R. 694-699).

In March, 1944, the petitioners again borrowed from the Continental National Bank to obtain additional working capital for Texasteel. On this occasion, loan funds amounted to $200,000.00 and were evidenced by two notes, each in the sum of $100,000.00. Texasteel was not a signer of either note. Petitioner, Allen J. Armstrong, signed one, and the petitioner, George W. Armstrong, Jr., signed the other. Petitioner George W. Armstrong, Sr., endorsed each note, which had on its face a provision similar to that contained in the $350,000.00 note that "all signers and endorsers are to be regarded as principals so far as their liability to payee is concerned" (R. 500, 502).

The respondent, before guaranteeing payment of these notes, received from the individual petitioners agreements of indemnity similar to that given to protect it from loss upon the $350,000.00 note (R. 494-496). The petitioners refused to pay the notes when requested by the bank (R. 311). The respondent paid them in keeping with the terms of its guaranties (R. 312), receiving assignments thereof from the bank (R. 314; 2 R. 77).

The respondent alleged in its pleadings that the Armstrongs are note principals (R. 46, 47, 50, 51, 55). The respondent further alleged that the petitioners' indemnities likewise cast primary liability upon them (2 R. 30, 34). The petitioners pleaded that they signed the notes as accommodation makers (R. 113). The Trial Court, in the trial of the declaratory suit, held that the liability of the Armstrongs and of Texasteel on the notes was that of primary obligors (R. 155-157), and in the monetary proceeding, entered judgment against the Armstrongs for the amounts due thereon (2 R. 110-111).

The individual petitioners contend error because a money judgment was not likewise entered against Texasteel.[17] There is, however, no Texas decision holding that judgment must be rendered against all primary obligors. McDonald v. Cabiness, 100 Tex. 615, 102 S. W. 721 (1907), and the many decisions following it, are authorities for the Circuit Court's decision that it was not necessary to sue or render a money judgment against the Armstrongs' co-principal, Texasteel. It was there said:

> "Under the rule in this state it is not indispensable to sue all the promissors on a joint promise. The plaintiff may sue one or more, or may dismiss as to one and proceed as to another, even in the appellate court. Miller v. Sullivan, 89 Tex. 480, 35 S. W. 362 and cases there cited. That decision has been followed and approved in the following cases: Bute v. Brainard, 93 Tex. 139, 53 S. W. 1017; and McFarlane v. Howell, 91 Tex. 221, 42 S. W. 853."

The case of Wood v. Canfield Paper Company, supra, relied upon by the petitioners as conflicting with the decision of the Circuit Court, deals with the rights of parties whose liability is secondary. That opinion applies the statutes[18] to the facts there involved. The holding is that no judgment should be rendered against a party whose liability is secondary, unless judgment be also rendered against the principal obligor, except where the principal obligor cannot be reached by the ordinary process of law, or his residence is unknown and cannot be ascertained with reasonable diligence, or where such principal obligor is insolvent.[19]

There is not only an absence of conflict between the decisions, but the Circuit Court's decision is correct and is in strict conformity with those of the Texas Courts for the following reasons:

[18] Petitioners' Brief, Cause No. 1227, Appendix B.
[19] Texas Revised Statutes, Art. 1987.

FIRST: The provision contained in all of the notes that "All signers and endorsers of this note are to be regarded as principals, so far as liability to payee is concerned", makes their status that which they agreed it would be, i. e., principals. Ritter v. Hamilton, 4 Texas 325 (1849); Ennis, et al. v. Crump, 6 Texas 85 (1851); Jameson v. Officer, 15 Texas Civ. App. 212, 39 S. W. 190 (1897); Head v. Cleburne Bldg. & Loan Assn., 25 S. W. 810 (1893); Moore v. Downie Bros. Circus (Texas Civ. App.), 164 S. W. 2nd 420 (1942).

In the petitioners' attempts to explain this note provision, they have admitted that it made them principals, as applied to the payee, but claim that such relationship is limited to the payee. In their brief filed with the Circuit Court they state ". . . the judgment recited a provision of the note that, as to the payee, appellants would be principals. This provision is not applicable to appellee (respondent). It related only to payee, the Continental National Bank" (Appellants' Brief, Circuit Court, p. 13).

The petitioners claim that the quoted provision has no application to a purchaser from the original payee, is not the law. That provision is not limited to the designated payee in the note, but includes any person to whom the debt subsequently becomes payable. Seastrunk et al. v. Pioneer Savings & Loan Co., 34 S. W. 466 (1896); Thompson v. Findlater Hardware Co., 156 S. W. 301 (1913).

SECOND: The Texas Courts have also held that when a stockholder, officer or director of a corporation signs or endorses a note to enable the corporation to obtain funds for its use and benefit, such stockholder becomes liable as a principal debtor to the obligee. In so holding, the Dallas Court of Civil Appeals, in Bank v. Goldstein, et al., 261 S. W. 538 (1924), said:

> ". . . Appellee was a stockholder in the L. Wenar Millinery Company, therefore was interested in the > welfare of said company, and, to the extent of the stock held by him, owned an interest in its property. This interest was sufficient consideration to make him liable as a principal debtor in the execution of said note, although the proceeds were for the use and benefit of the L. Wenar Millinery Company, Reed v. Pueblo First National Bank, 23 Colo. 380, 48 Pac. 507, Vitkovitch v. Kleinecke, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 20, 75 S. W. 544 . . ."

To like effect are Otto v. Republic National Company, 173 S. W. (2nd) 234 (1943); Commercial Inv. Co. v. Graves, 132 S. W. (2nd) 439 (1939).

The individual petitioners owned all of Texasteel's outstanding stock, and admittedly signed and endorsed the notes for the benefit of their corporation.

THIRD: Finally and conclusively, the petitioners' joint and several liability as indemnitors, no less than their liability upon the notes, made them primary obligors. Howell v. Commissioner, 69 Fed. 2nd 447 (1934); Eller v. Erwin, 265 S. W. 595 (1924); Olson, et al. v. Smith, 72 S. W. 2nd 650 (1934); U. S. F. & G. Company v. Bank of Hattiesburg, 91 So. 344 (1922); Abrahamson v. Burnett, 157 Wash. 668, 290 Pac. 228 (at 229-230) (1930); Bank v. Hanshaw, 255 Ky. 825, 75 S. W. 2nd 529 (1934); 42 C. J. S. 612, Sec. 30.

It is respectfully submitted that no one of the reasons advanced by the petitioners in support of their Petition is sound, and that there is no occasion for review by this Court of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1946

No. 1226	No. 1227
TEXASTEEL MANUFACTURING CO., ET AL., Petitioners, vs. SEABOARD SURETY COMPANY, Respondent.	GEO. W. ARMSTRONG, SR., ET AL, Petitioners, vs. SEABOARD SURETY COMPANY, Respondent.

PETITIONERS' MOTION FOR REHEARING IN BOTH OF THE ABOVE STYLED AND NUMBERED APPLICATIONS, IN CAUSE NO. 11,499, SAME STYLE, LATELY PENDING IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT, AND IN CAUSE NO. 11,603, SAME STYLE, LATELY PENDING IN SAID CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS AND CONSOLIDATED IN THAT COURT.

To the Honorable Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Now come Texasteel Manufacturing Company, a Texas corporation, George W. Armstrong Sr., Allen J. Armstrong, George W. Armstrong Jr., and Mary C. Armstrong, petitioners in Cause No. 1226, and said individuals above named being petitioners in Cause No. 1127, and respectfully present this their Petition for Rehearing in both of said causes, which were consolidated in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and for grounds for this Petition said petitioners would respectfully show:

I.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the District Court in the exercise of its general jurisdiction, and not sitting as a bankruptcy court, had jurisdiction to entertain this suit against the corporate petitioners for an adjudication of the liability of said corporation on the notes described in respondent's petition, and such jurisdiction to decree said corporate petitioner liable for principal, interest and attorney fees of said note; said corporation, at said time, being involved in certain reorganization proceedings pending in the bankruptcy court for the same District, without the consent of said bankruptcy court.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

Petitioners respectfully refer this Honorable Court to paragraph numbered 2, page 22, of the Petition in cause No. 1226.

II.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the District Court had jurisdiction to render judgment decreeing the liability of the corporate petitioner upon certain notes described in respondent's petition when said corporation was involved in reorganization proceedings then pending in the Bankruptcy Court without pleading or proof that said claim had been filed in such reorganization proceedings within six months.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

Petitioners respectfully refer this Honorable Court to paragraph numbered 1, pages 20, 21 and 22, of the Petition in cause No. 1226.

III.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the District Court had jurisdiction to render a declaratory judgment declaring that the respondent was not liable to said corporate petitioner on its claim that respondents had by fraud and duress taken over the management and the performance of certain contracts between corporate petitioner and the Naval Bureau, when said corporate petitioner was involved in certain bankruptcy proceedings then pending in the same district without the consent of the Bankruptcy Court.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

Petitioners respectfully refer this Court to paragraph numbered 3, pages 22 to 27, inclusive, of Petition in cause No. 1226, and in this connection would respectfully show that on June 5, 1942, when the representative of respondent demanded the removal of petitioners, George W. and Allen J. Armstrong, and John Foster from any part in the corporate management of said corporation (R. 220, 221, 222, 223, 226-27 and 303-4), that the said contracts in question were not in default, but performance of such contracts had been extended by written contracts to October 1942 (see Appendix D, pages 40-42 of said Petition in cause No. 1226). Said contracts not being in default, no right accrued to respondent to demand the removal of said individuals under the escrow agreement, which only provided for such removal to prevent a declaration of a default. Said escrow agreement did not authorize the arbitrary action by respondent. See cases cited at pages 23 and 24, Petition in cause No. 1226. 17 C. J. S., Sec. 397, p. 887; 54 Am. Jur., p. 581, Sec. 68.

IV.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the allegation of respondent's complaint, in the District Court, made an appropriate case for a declaratory judgment, and in affirming said judgment, when the record showed that the only grounds alleged by respondent for such judgment, was that it was necessary that it be advised as to the validity of certain trustee's certificates in said reorganization proceedings which it had purchased in order that it might determine whether it should further finance the operation of the Port Arthur plant. The records show that since said trial the contract between the Navy and corporate petitioner had been performed or cancelled, and respondent relieved of all liability on the bonds of said corporate petitioner, and that said trustee's certificates had been paid or refinanced, and that respondent had no further connection with said officer or said reorganization proceedings, and the facts relating to liability or non-liability of petitioners on said note has already transpired, and the facts as to respondent's liability, for the operation of said plant, had already transpired and there was nothing in the evidence showing an existing or imminent invasion of respondent's rights by petitioners which would result in injury to it.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to the Brief of Argument at pages 56, 57 and 58 of said Petition hereinabove referred to.

V.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the burden of proof was on petitioners to prove either fraud, duress or mismanagement, by respondent, because the burden of proof was on respondent, who sought a declaratory judgment against petitioners decreeing that it had not been guilty of any fraud, duress or coercion, and that it was not responsible for mismanagement of the operation of the Port Arthur plant, and it had not mismanaged said operation.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

VI.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the evidence was insufficient to raise an issue either of fraud or duress or mismanagement by respondent in the operation of the Port Arthur plant.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to pages 12, 13, 14 and 15, and pages 22 to 27, inclusive, of said petition hereinabove referred to.

VII.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in affirming said declaratory judgment based on instructed verdict, and in holding that petitioners wholly failed to prove fraud by respondent, because the burden was on respondent to prove the allegations of its petition for declaratory judgment, and the evidence in the case raised the issue of fraudulent representatitions on the part of respondent's agent O'Neal, and that petitioners were induced thereby to surrender the control of said Port Arthur plant operation to a management committee.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to the pages of the Petition last hereinabove referred to under the preceding assignment as supporting Assignment No. VII.

VIII.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in affirming the declaratory judgment based on an instructed verdict, and in holding that petitioners had failed to prove duress in the appointment of a management committee because the evidence showed that respondent's agent presented the petitioners a letter from the Navy demanding the removal of certain of the petitioners from any part of the management of the affairs of the corporate petitioners with a threat, that if they persisted in such refusal that respondent would have no recourse but to proceed under its powers in certain escrow agreements of March 1942 and remove said petitioners from control of the affairs of said corporation and that said individual petitioners accepted the alternative of a management committee, rather than be ousted from control of said corporation; that said demand was unlawful, in that said contract was not in default, and petitioners were in no way responsible for the delay in the execution thereof.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to the pages of said Petition referred to under Assignment VI above as supporting this assignment.

IX.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that petitioners failed to prove any case for recovery against respondent because the evidence showed that after the appointment of the management committee that the operations at Port Arthur were dominated and controlled by respondent's agents and that the plant was operated in a negligent, inefficient manner, and that if it had not been so operated, losses of approximately over a million dollars would have been avoided.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to pages 15 to 20, inclusive, and the pages referred to under Assignment VI hereof in support of the foregoing assignment.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in affirming the judgment of the District Court, because there was no evidence authorizing an instructed verdict in favor of respondent on the issue of estoppel and ratification, in that the evidence showed that respondent's power under said escrow agreement of March 1942 continued through the period of operation of said Port Arthur plant, and, therefore, the duress continued for the same period and further because there was no evidence showing a ratification or estoppel.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

This Honorable Court is respectfully referred to page 26 of said Petition above referred to in support of this assignment.

XI.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that the rendition of monetary judgment awarding execution against petitioner for the amount of the principal, interest and attorney fees of said notes sued on and said judgment being wholly based on the declaratory judgment and entered while an appeal from said declaratory judgment was pending was not in error.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to pages 7, 8, 9 and 10 of the Petition in cause No. 1227.

XII.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in affirming the judgment of the trial court entered after the rendition of the declaratory judgment and in the same case while an appeal from said declaratory judgment was then pending.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to pages 7 to 10, inclusive, of said Petition in cause No. 1227.

XIII.

The trial court was without jurisdiction to proceed further in the case in which said declaratory judgment was rendered while an appeal from said declaratory judgment was pending.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to pages 7 to 10, inclusive, of said Petition in cause No. 1227.

XIV.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in holding that petitioners were primarily liable on the notes for which judgment was rendered against them, and that it was not error for the trial court to render judgment against petitioners for the full amount of said notes without having previously, or at the same time, rendered judgment against Texasteel Manufacturing Company, the principal debtor, without either allegation or proof that said corporation was insolvent, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to pages 11, 12 and 13 of said above-mentioned Petition in support of this Assignment.

XV.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in affirming the judgment of the trial court against the petitioners on the obligation sued on, pending the proceedings for reorganization of Texasteel Manufacturing Company in which said corporation was involved; said proceedings being filed by respondent, without exhausting the assets of the principal debtor before rendering judgment against petitioners.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT

The Court is respectfully referred to pages 53 to 56, inclusive, of supporting brief to Petition in cause No. 1226.

WHEREFORE, petitioners respectfully pray that a rehearing be granted to them by this Honorable Court in each of the causes hereinabove styled and numbered, to the end that the judgment in each of said causes may be reversed and remanded to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion of this Honorable Court.
